

I have not been satisfied with Corporate television for some time. Short of Oprah and a few morning shows, the content has reached an all time low. I am concerned about a rumor, that days before the 2004 presidential election, some stations will delay regular programming to aire an Anti-Kerry program.

My concern is for the detriment this can cause to the Kerry campaign. The persons tuned in to view that program are likely to be influenced by its content.

There are stringent rules that govern a presidential election. I would hope that the FCC would know better than to support subliminal Republican campaigning as such support and funding must be documented.

It is your right to be objective in asserting your power to control such slanderous programming. It is also your responsibility to do such. It is not, on the otherhand, your interest to aire programming that affiliates with church or party.

Thank you,
